Case Report

Two young patients, the first 18 years old girl & the second 17 years old male presented to my private endoscopy clinic with history of accidental swallowing of pins & upper abdominal discomfort. On upper gastrointestinal endoscopy, a the pin was seen embedded in the gastric antrum near the pylorus in both cases. With the use of the biopsy forceps the pin was removed in the first cases while in the second case snare was used to remove the pin successfully. Both patients did well on follow up & no signs of perforation was detected (Figures). Two young
